RESEARCH WILL CHANGE THE FUTURE

Help BEAT Diabetes is part of Research for the Future, an NHS-supported campaign that helps people find out about and take part in health and care research. Taking part in research helps to discover new ways to prevent, diagnose and manage diabetes.

If you live with diabetes, or have been told you are at risk of developing it, register now to find out about research taking place in your area.

Registering to take part means we will inform you about research opportunities. The process is easy, we will ask you for your contact details as well as some questions about your general health and diabetes. Everyone over the age of 18 is welcome to register.

There are lots of different types of research you can take part in, including questionnaires, joining discussion groups or taking part in trials to find new treatments. It is always your decision whether to take part in anything we tell you about. If at any time you change your mind and no longer want to take part, let us know.

Any information you provide is stored on a secure NHS database. It will never be shared with anyone else. For further details about how we protect your personal information, see our privacy notice www.researchforthefuture.org/privacy
